Annual Report of The University Library
for the Fiscal Year 1979-80
October 1, 1980

To the Chancellor of the University:

Three events during the year deserve particular mention. The first was the groundbreaking for the construction of the new central library on University Day, October 12, 1979. This ceremony marked the culmination of six years of effort, including the negotiations for the project's funding by the University Administration and the planning within the Library. At the time of this report, final plans for equipping the building are approaching completion, and preparations for moving the collection are well advanced. The official date for occupancy is still the Summer of 1982.

The death of Louis Round Wilson on December 10, 1979, just seventeen days short of his 103rd birthday, ended an era in the Library's life and, indeed, in the history of the University. Dr. Wilson, a native of Lenoir, matriculated as an undergraduate at the University in 1899 and from that time until his death, with one brief absence immediately after graduation and another of ten years while he served as Dean of the Graduate Library School at the University of Chicago, was an influential presence at the University. He served his alma mater in a number of capacities, most notably as University Librarian from 1901 to 1932. Other texts have frequently recalled those contributions, since his death. Here it is perhaps most appropriate to record that his concern for and interest in the Library was unswerving throughout his adult life. That devotion was evident in his daily attendance at the Library until December, 1973, when he suffered a crippling fall. The library world and this university will miss him greatly.

The year's third event of particular significance was the resignation of Chancellor N. Ferebee Taylor in January. From the time of his inauguration, Chancellor Taylor was a firm believer in the Library's unique contribution to the entire community and its pervasive influence on the academic program. He recognized the impact that the presence of the University's library has had on the intellectual and scholarly life of the State and of the region and strongly committed himself to enhancing its resources. During his term in office, he was unrivalled by any other university administrator in the country in sustaining library development. As a result of this strenuous and constant support, the University now has a firm foundation for library services up to and beyond the end of the century. Chancellor Taylor's leadership will be sorely missed, but it is reassuring that his concern for the Library's welfare has not flagged since he left office. Library development has always been high among your priorities, too, Mr. Chancellor, and the Library looks forward to continued realization of its potential under your stewardship.

The last stage of the library program initiated by Chancellor Taylor became active when the Board of Trustees selected the architects for the renovation of Wilson Library—Flowers, Ballard, Polier, and Associates. Immediately after their selection, representatives of the firm began to meet with the Library staff and to work with the excellent building program compiled by the staff and by Gordon Rutherford, University Planning Officer. When renovated, the building will contain the three special collections—the Manuscripts Department, the Rare Book Collection, and the North Carolina Collection—the map collection, elements of the Photographic Services, and some components of the Media Center. The main, second, and third floors, with attendant stacks, will accommodate the special collections, and the other units will be on the ground floor. Problems of security and environment are of crucial importance for the kinds of collections involved, and these characteristics of the building, with all the constraints imposed by an older structure, have received extensive and close study. The 1977 stack addition will become a self-contained building, separate from the rest of Wilson Library for all normal purposes, and will provide space for little used materials from the general collections.

COOPERATIVE PROJECTS

The cooperative effort in the Research Triangle area to develop an on-line catalog for the three university libraries and the Triangle Park's research facilities made good, even remarkable, progress during the year. Funded by a Federal grant under Title II-C of the Higher Education Act of 1965, the project team began developing and testing the necessary software. The very satisfactory progress made thus far faces a sharp curtailment if the level of Federal funding declines. In response to that possibility, the three directors of the university libraries have initiated a development program, which includes an approach to the firms presently located in the Triangle and the formation of a Development Advisory Committee of knowledgeable and interested fund-raisers. The potential of this information system, now designated The Triangle Research Libraries Network (TRLN), is such that it should provide valuable services to the research efforts already operative in the area and serve as a significant enticement for location here. In the longer view, the system ultimately could serve the entire University system and, indeed, the citizenry of the State generally. It is hoped that when the project's potential value becomes known, substantial assistance from facilities in the Triangle and from foundations will be forthcoming.

TRLN is primarily an information system to assist research, but it can have many other benefits, including coordinated collection development, more expeditious interlibrary lending, and extended reference service. It is consistent with the tradition of cooperative library operations in the area which stretches back to the 1930's. Moreover, it has given impetus to several related cooperative undertakings. One committee associated with the project is presently studying possible improvements in the interlibrary lending conducted among the three university libraries and the research units in the Triangle. Another committee has been compiling a guide to the libraries' large microfilm collections, so that these useful resources can become more accessible to researchers. A third group is studying problems of preservation in the three libraries and exploring possibilities of a cooperative approach to them.

THE COLLECTIONS

The incentive for cooperation is largely a combination of the desire to expand the use of available resources and the necessity for reducing costs. The second consideration becomes more pressing with each year. Educational and library literature is replete with documentation of library costs' inordinate inflation that demonstrably exceeds the increases in other university costs. The rise in the cost of materials, particularly European serials, has made deep inroads into the welcome support which the Library has received in recent years. That support has made sustained growth in the collections possible, but each year it is necessary to transfer additional funds into the serials budget at the expense of the monographic budget.

Several opportunities for additional interdependence in collection development with Duke University's library emerged, most notably in Latin American acquisitions and in newspaper subscriptions. In regard to the last, a staff committee, chaired by Dr. Patricia Dominguez of the Bibliographic Services Department, produced a comprehensive and systematic description of the two libraries' newspaper collections and suggested specific divisions of responsibility. The report, now under study by both library staffs, can form the basis for a clear, effective sharing of the collecting burden for newspapers and promises to produce substantial savings, as well as better management of the collections. A joint committee, drawn from the staffs of the three university libraries in TRLN, is now working on a similar review of serials subscriptions.

The growth of the Library's collections will be apparent from the statistics published at the end of this report. In 1978-79, the Library's gross additions of 120,668 volumes ranked 14th among the libraries of the Association of Research Libraries. This year, those additions rose to 129,652 volumes. This performance, also accomplished without additional staff, is in part due to the flexibility and responsiveness injected into the system by the recent collection development program. This new approach, which places the responsibility for current collecting in the staff bibliographers' hands, has led to the efficient engagement of approval plans on a broadening scale, the coordination of the purchase and integration of duplicate copies, and the purchase of large collections to enrich the collection where needed.

For the first time in recent years, under a new policy on acquiring manuscripts for research, the Rare Book Collection added three medieval manuscripts of unusual interest: The Life of Alexander the Great, in the Latin version of Julius Valerius, dating from the 13th century; a composite volume from 13th century Spain, including the Summa Viciorum of Guilemas Paradlus (d. 1271), the basis for Chaucer's "The Parson's Tale"; and an illuminated manuscript of the late 10th or early 11th century, a Biblical commentary by Guibert de Nogent. The Music Library made two acquisitions in the same category: an 18th century copy of five cantatas by Agostine Steffani and a transcription by Ferruccio Busoni of Bach's Well Tempered Clavier, Book I. The Manuscripts Department purchased the papers of Frances Polk Shipwith, containing letters from her father, Leonidus Polk, on Southern social life during the Reconstruction period; and the North Carolina Collection obtained a copy of the authoritative edition of Walker's Appeal in Four Articles . . . (1830), a well-known contribution to the debate on slavery.

Friends and alumni of the University continued to express their support through gifts to the Library. One source of such gifts, the faculty, played a particularly significant role in the acquisitions program this year. Professor Frederico Gil of the Political Science Department donated much of his personal library, gathered over several decades of distinguished scholarship. The gift contained approximately 2,000 monographs, 234 serials, and 211 pamphlets, on Latin America, including a large number of rare and unobtainable items. Professor J. Douglas Eyre of the Geography Department gave a number of out-of-print items on Japanese geography. Professor George Mowry of the History Department donated his extensive book collection on the Progressive Era and, to the audio-visual center in the Undergraduate Library, roughly 3,000 slides. Professors Joseph Sloane of the Art Department and Amos Hawley of the Sociology Department gave their papers to the Manuscript Department; and the widows of Dr. Walter Reece Berryhill, former dean of the School of Medicine, and of Professor Oscar K. Rice of the Chemistry Department gave the papers of their husbands. Professor Mark P. Reed of the English Department donated leaves from the presses of Caxton and De Worde and gave the Music Library 183 folio sheets of British songs and a Busoni letter.

Mrs. Marjorie N. Bond donated a number of private press items and 18th century imprints to the Rare Book Collection, which also received two hundred annotated volumes from the library of C. S. Lewis, donated by Rev. Walter Hooper. The North Carolina Collection received the book collection of Mrs. Bert Linker and 200 volumes from the family of Alfred Nixon, in addition to the gifts mentioned above. Mrs. Holt McPherson, widow of the well-known journalist and civic leader of High Point, donated Mr. McPherson's papers to the Manuscripts Department; and Alexander King of Flat Rock donated the papers and diaries of Judge Mitchell King, an antebellum leader of Charleston. Significant gifts to the Southern Historical Collection were: the papers of Dr. Stuart Willis, tubercular care physician and administrator of North Carolina, given by Dr. Willis; the papers of Dr. Hubert Royster and the Royster family of Raleigh, given by Dr. Henry P. Royster; the papers of Thomas J. White, Jr., prominent North Carolina political leader, given by Mr. White; and the papers of Francis Speight and Sarah Blakeslee Speight, well-known artists of Greenville, North Carolina, given by Mr. and Mrs. Speight. Thomas S. Kenan III placed the papers of the Kenan family of Duplin County in the Collection on permanent loan; and the children of James Spencer Love, founder of Burlington Industries, and of Martha Eskridge Love Ayers did the same with their family papers.

The year 1980 has special significance for the Manuscripts Department, because it marks the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Southern Historical Collection, a resource which in that time has become indispensable to scholars studying Southern history. Several events during the year will celebrate the anniversary. One, the Friends of the Library dinner with speaker Shelby Foote, an established Southern novelist and historian, fell within this reporting period. In added recognition, the Friends allocated $5,000 for the Collection to purchase a suitable addition to its holdings.

SERVICES

The servicing of the collections continued to expand and became more varied. Between them, the two reference departments conducted 117 bibliographic tours and lectures, 711 computer searches, and 74 LaRCs, the research assistance designed for graduate students. Together, the two departments handled over 67,000 reference transactions during the year. In the Business Administration/Social Sciences Reference Department, John Erlandson and Jeffrey Beam completed a computerized guide to the statistics contained in the international documents regularly received by the Department; and the Humanities Reference Department revised several established subject bibliographies, in addition to completing the Department's contribution to the guide to major microform collections, mentioned earlier. The Circulation Department's operations became significantly more complicated with the imposition of fines on Faculty members with overdue books or recalled books, and it was necessary for the Department to invest a great amount of time in a major public relations effort. However, comparative statistics clearly show that the policy is having the desired effect and that Faculty overdues, recalled books, and lost books, have declined sharply in numbers.

Two important areas of extended service became operative during the year. The Department of Human Resources of North Carolina designated the Library a Basic Rehabilitation Facility, and, on a basis of 4:1 funding with the University, equipped the Library for greatly improved services to unsighted students. The funds provided for the purchase of a Kurzweil Reading Machine, which is capable of reading most types found in printed material and converting them to synthetic speech; two Visualek Electronic Visual Aid Systems, consisting of a television monitor with two cameras and producing an enlarged image of printed materials on a video screen; two Varispeech Speech Time Compressor/Expander Devices which record or play cassette tapes at increased or reduced speed; two Luxo Illuminated Magnifiers, which help visually impaired readers to use printed materials; and two Olivetti Lexikon Electric Typewriters for Braille typing. The Facility is on the fifth level of the stack addition and has had a very positive response from handicapped students.

The Library and the Media Center, under Dr. Donald Shaw, have been collaborating the past two or three years to improve the audio-visual services offered to students in the House Undergraduate Library. This cooperation produced dramatic results last year, with a significant alteration of the physical arrangements in House Library and the addition of far more sophisticated equipment than had been available in previous years. That progress continued this year with the acquisition of the following items: five audio cassette players, two film projectors, one video cassette player and monitor, 300 films, 50 videocassettes, videotapes of six Shakespeare plays, and 2,100 slides in the American History Slide Collection. The Nonprint Materials Collection is finding a large audience, and students are regularly using it, both on an assigned and a voluntary basis.

The Technical Services Division has had an equally active year, once again meeting projected goals for the collections' growth. The Acquisitions Department increased the number of books searched for duplication and verification by 27% and repeated its admirable record on the location and acquisition of out-of-print titles—further evidence of the effectiveness of the reservation procedure instituted last year. In the Bibliographic Services Department, one signal achievement was the renegotiation of exchanges with Czechoslovakia that resulted in a 50% reduction in costs. Finally, the Cataloging Department eliminated the entire backlog of filing for the public catalog as well as keeping abreast of this year's additions and completed the revision of records which permitted the transfer of 4,500 volumes from Chapin Library in the City and Regional Planning Department to Wilson Library, in addition to a number of other special projects.

THE STAFF

The Library's staff accomplishes many of its tasks and much of its planning through a variety of committees and task forces. This approach is usually most effective when interdepartmental and interdisciplinary talents and training are necessary to a project. This year, such groups were working in the areas of the future of the catalog, automation, various aspects of collection development, user studies, minority recruitment, and commercial uses of the library materials (particularly the contractual arrangements with Microfilm Corporation of America of Sanford), among others. The Planning Council reviewed the Library's formal statement of Goals and Objectives, first composed in 1974, and made a number of revisions. The departments and departmental libraries then used the new statement for a revision of each unit's statement.

The staff's participation in professional groups, publication record, and interest in continuing education, continues to grow each year. Thirty-six staff members attending professional conferences were either officers, participants in programs, or members of committees. The total staff produced 38 articles or lectures and two books, in addition to a number of editorships. Locally, the Librarian's Association held eight panel discussions and lectures on topics ranging from the Thornton Report on the undergraduate curriculum to the White House Conference on Libraries and Information Science. The Association also sponsored a conference on public services which was addressed by nationally known speakers, conducted a short course in statistical methodologies, and held a series of five sack lunch discussions with colleagues in charge of areas of interest in the Library's operations.

All members of the staff devoted substantial amounts of time to the two building projects. The members of those units moving to the new central library reviewed and revised furniture and equipment layouts, while the design team worked closely with the architect on finishes, color coordination, and graphics. Archie Fields, Circulation Librarian, wrote detailed specifications for the stacks and obtained appropriate reviews of them before submitting them to the University Purchasing Office. The architects for the Wilson Library renovation regularly consulted the staffs of the Special Collections and had completed the schematic drawings and submitted them for State approval by the end of February. Currently, these two groups are refining these plans for the design development drawings.

Twelve members resigned from the Library staff this year: Linda Allman and Jeanne Sawyer from the Cataloging Department; Larry Dixon from the Music Library; Larry White from the Chemistry Library; Marilyn Souders from the Business Administration/Social Sciences Reference Department; Margaret Winchell from the Bibliographic Services Department; Ellen Neal from the Manuscripts Department; Carol Koenig and Jane Bivens from the Periodicals Department; Carolyn Hurt from the Undergraduate Library; Rebecca Stroud from the North Carolina Collection; and Barbara Hornick-Lockard from the Undergraduate Library. Six new staff members have joined the staff during the year: Bernice Bergup in the Humanities Reference Department has replaced Pattie McIntyre, who retired last year; Miriam Sheaves has succeeded Julian Green, who resigned last year, as Geology Librarian; Joseph Collins has become German Language Cataloger, replacing Deborah Clinton, who resigned last year; Faye Gamel succeeded Ms. Neal in the Manuscripts Department; Sharon Gleim replaced Ms. Bivens in the Periodicals Department; and Frieda Rosenberg has become Assistant Serials Cataloger, in a new position.

On May 1, Samuel Boone retired as head of the Interlibrary Services

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA LIBRARY

Center after 34 years of State employment. Mr. Boone has a national reputation in micrographics and has made several original contributions to the field during his distinguished career. He was among the first to produce catalog cards with Xerox equipment, before the advent of computer-produced cards, and was one of the early pioneers in the use of the Copyflo machine in libraries. He is an established consultant on equipment and continues to serve on major committees of the American Library Association concerned with micrographics and related subjects, like copyright legislation. His unit, which brought together several related functions, has now been reorganized: interlibrary lending is now an element of the Humanities Reference Department, the BA/SS Reference Department now supervises the microform reading room, and the Photographic Service now reports to the North Carolina Collection. In large part, this reorganization resulted from the new physical arrangements that will be necessary after the opening of the new central library, but it is hoped that this decentralization will produce better reporting lines in all the units concerned.

The Council on Library Resources, a grant-awarding foundation for libraries, has had a program for several years under which promising administrators in mid-career spend a year's internship with the director of an Association of Research Libraries library. This year the Council selected the Library as one of two in which to place an intern and assigned Ms. Susan Nutter, Associate Librarian of the Engineering Libraries at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, to it. Ms. Nutter has attended all administrative meetings throughout the year, has accompanied the University Librarian to most off-campus meetings, and has participated in staff committees and task forces. In addition, she has had a special assignment to produce a brochure on TRLN for potential donors. She has contributed greatly to the groups with whom she has worked and has given the staff the benefit of a perspective derived from a different experience and another library. In accordance with the Council's usual practice, the Library will have a second intern in 1980-81. Ms. Kathleen Moretto, Assistant Music Librarian at Yale University, will spend the year here under the same program.

The Library's administration again benefited from the counsel and guidance of the Administrative Board of the Library. The Board addressed three specific issues and established policies concerning them that changed past practices. In the previous year, the Board had passed a policy which imposed fines on faculty members who ignored overdue notices or recalls of books on loan to them. The Board put the policy into effect this year, with a trial period during the first semester, when fines were forgiven, and actual enforcement in the Spring semester. After a year's experience with the new policy, the Board intends to re-examine it, with the intention of making any necessary modifications. Last year, too, the Board responded to faculty interest in the purchase of manuscripts by creating a procedure to safeguard against inequities among disciplines and to assure quality in these purchases. During the past year, the Board implemented that procedure, with the result that the Library made several valuable purchases. Finally, the Board gave serious study to the creation of a General Science Committee, recommended by the Collection Development Program adopted two years ago, for the coordination of collection development among the science libraries. The study produced a revised composition of the Committee, which officially began to function this Spring.

It is customary to end such reports with an expression of appreciation to the staff. The statement that follows is, emphatically, in no sense perfunctory. Much of the content of what has preceded reveals an expansion in acquisitions, the provision of new and more sophisticated services, and contact with a growing community needing library resources. The staff have met these increasing demands and have gone beyond that response with initiative and creativity to reach out for new opportunities for the community. This remarkable record, attained with no additions to their numbers—and often in the face of long delays for replacements—or to the materials budget, plainly results from their intelligence, talents, and professionalism. Unfortunately, the abilities and resultant contribution of a library staff often go unnoticed in an academic community, although that contribution is a weighty factor in the institution's quality. It is a pleasure to be able to say that this university community has been quick to recognize and to acknowledge both the quality of the Library's staff and its importance to the scholarly life of the University. It is gratifying to be able to say that the Library's staff have full deserved that recognition, and at no time more than in the year just described.

The University Administration's support of the Library has been both substantial and constant over the past several years. The result is that the Library has now reached a level appropriate to the University's other programs, after a period of decline. It is vital that there be no erosion of the gains already made and that library services on the campus and in the State not only be maintained in their present condition but, if possible, raised to a still higher level of quality. As this report indicates, there are a number of areas in which those of us in the Library can advance this effort—through cooperative enterprises, more efficient use of resources, attempts to increase those resources, and the like. In the end, however, the challenge of sustaining the efforts of the last few years rests with the University Administration. Appreciative of the opportunities to provide better service in the recent past, we in the Library look forward in confidence to enhancing that service under the Administration's leadership.

Respectfully submitted,

James F. Govan
University Librarian

Annual Report of The University Library
for the Fiscal Year 1980-81
October 1, 1981

To the Chancellor of the University:

No evidence exists to indicate that there was white water on the River Styx, but many a research library director in recent years has had the peculiar sensation of the funereal combined with the frenzied that that picture suggests. Libraries have experienced acute financial stress before, but at no time has that pressure coincided so unfortunately with unavoidable demands. For, at this time, libraries are in a transition from manual to automated systems in many areas of their operations and must bear dual costs that increase annually and, in many instances, are not responsive to any reduction in services. The most careful husbanding of resources still leaves those providing the services and those dependent upon them conscious of a loss of quality and of opportunity.

The future seems to hold additional problems for this second group. Technological innovations in public catalogs will require both new skills and consultation of at least two catalogs to locate materials. The need for greater sharing of resources will probably mean greater delays in the availability of materials. These necessities, coupled with the urgent need for broadened preservation programs, will force the diversion of funds away from acquisitions. Both the American Association of Universities, in collaboration with the Council on Library Resources, and the American Association for the Advancement of the Humanities, in collaboration with the Association of Research Libraries, are mounting efforts to make these issues and others better understood by faculties. The University Librarian has participated in the central planning for both these efforts; and the University is one of three, with the University of Colorado and Princeton University, selected to experiment with the distribution of a publication, Library Issues, specifically designed to explain the challenges facing research libraries to university communities.

These national conditions have reached a new level of refinement locally. Budgetary constrictions are occurring just as the Library faces the occupation of a new building, the renovation of an old one, and the compelling need to automate a number of additional functions. While University support for additions to the collections remains strong, the recent Statewide limitations on personnel and equipment budgets have been inordinately hurtful, under these circumstances. The new facilities will certainly solve many old problems, but they will create many additional needs. While these needs go unmet, the Library staff can only hope for the patient understanding of the community and the serious concern of those charged with allocating resources.

THE STAFF

The Library, like most research libraries, regrettably, has long lacked the staff to meet adequately the demands placed upon it. This understaffing grew markedly worse in 1979-80 when a freeze on hiring delayed a number of vital replacements and again this year, with the elimination of five positions. The adoption of a new policy, effective September 1, will require special action by the Board of Trustees before the amount of annual leave nationally prevalent can be extended to librarians hired in the future. The combined effect of these events left the present staff somewhat demoralized, and the quality of future recruits will rest in no small part on finding the means to overcome these circumstances.

Despite the above setbacks, the staff continued its record of remarkable productivity. Together, they produced twenty-four journal articles and three monographs. (A list at the end of this report contains the books and articles by the staff.) Staff initiative created the expanded services and analytical studies described below, and that same initiative manifested itself in professional leadership. Ms. Diane Strauss, head of the Business Administration/Social Sciences Reference Department, was elected Vice-President/President-Elect of the North Carolina Chapter of the Special Libraries Association. Ms. Strauss and Dana Sally, Librarian of the Brauer Library, served on the Administrative Board of the Library. Ms. Marcia Tuttle, head of the Periodicals Department, served as Chairman of the Serials Section of the Resources and Technical Services Division of the American Library Association. Dr. H. G. Jones, Curator of the North Carolina Collection, was president of the Historical Society of North Carolina. It is a special pleasure to record that Ms. Anna Brooke Allan, recently retired as member of the staff of the Southern Historical Collection after many years of service, received the C. Knox Massey Award for Distinguished Service to the University.

For the past nine years, the staff has made invaluable contributions to the necessary planning and implementation of interdepartmental functions through committees and task forces. The usefulness of these groups was evident this year in a number of areas, like the planning of the building projects and the Communications Committee's very helpful study of intra-staff communications. Nowhere was that usefulness more apparent than in the elaborate planning for the new Anglo-American Cataloging Rules' adoption. Implementation of those plans in January was a smooth transition, consequently, and caused none of the disruption generally predicted and experienced in some individual libraries. The group responsible, the Task Force on Bibliographic Planning, has become a standing committee and now is studying the numerous problems related to providing public catalogs in the new library and the renovated Wilson Library. This change in the group's status was itself the result of the Task Force on Committees' work, that has led to a complete re-structuring of the staff committee system. A list of the committees and task forces, as they have existed this past year, appears at the end of this report.

The Librarians' Association once again presented a series of programs to support professional development. As usual, the series began with reports from those staff members who had attended the American Library Association's annual meeting and included programs on academic status, stress management, special libraries in the Research Triangle, specialized collections within the library system, facilities planning, and current research by staff members. On March 9th and 10th, the Association held its annual Spring conference, on the subject of "Scholarly Publication in the 1980's." The guest speakers included Warren J. Haas, President of the Council on Library Resources; Tom Featherstone of the New Jersey Institute of Technology; John Cole of the Library of Congress; and B. J. Jaeger, a member of the editorial board of the Journal of Health, Policies and Law. From the University, Matthew Hodgson, Director of the University Press; George A. Kennedy, Paddison Professor of Classics; Marcia Tuttle, head of the Serials Department; and Margaret Lospinuso, Music Librarian; made presentations.

On July 1, John Shipman, who had served since Patrick Wreath's death as Acting Chief Bibliographer, permanently assumed that position. Luke Swindler then became the Assistant to Mr. Shipman and Social Sciences Bibliographer. Carol Leadenham succeeded Murlin Croucher as Slavic Bibliographer, and Nadyezdha Zilper became Slavic cataloger. Tucker Respass became cataloger for the North Carolina Collection, and Alan Gregory became cataloger for the Music Library. Larry Alford succeeded Archie Fields, who retired after seventeen years service in the Library, as Circulation Librarian. Both Mr. Fields and Mr. Alford deserve recognition for the special responsibilities that they have carried in planning the equipping of and the move to the new library building. Elizabeth Mullaney replaced Mr. Alford as Assistant Circulation Librarian, Timothy Dempsey became Business Reference Librarian, and Sharon Gleim became Assistant Periodicals Librarian. Three librarians were appointed to the House Undergraduate Library: Gillian Debreczeny as Undergraduate Reference Librarian, Anne Fields as Undergraduate Circulation Librarian, and Mitchell Whichard as Undergraduate Nonprint Librarian. Celine Noel became Science Cataloger, and Sarah Stubbs became Reclassification Cataloger. Patricia Langelier succeeded John Erlandson as Documents Librarian. Joseph Jerz, Assistant University Librarian for Staff Development, resigned. Ellen Anderson succeeded Carol Nielsen as Library Science Librarian. Paul Sherer left his position as Gifts and Exchange Librarian in the Acquisitions Department at the end of the year. For a second year, the Library had the privilege of hosting a Council on Library Resources Intern, Kathleen Moretto, Assistant Director of the Yale University Music Library. Ms. Moretto became a valuable member of several staff committees with whom she served during the year, observed and shared most of the University Librarian's activities, and undertook several special assignments, including the design of a set of banners which will hang in the new building.

Expansion of services typified the Public Services Division's work. The Undergraduate Library increased its individual consultations on term papers from 112 last year to 467. The staff there gave instruction in the use of the library to 5,162 freshmen and made 185 presentations to 255 English sections. The Business Administration/Social Sciences Reference Department delivered 115 bibliographic lectures; answered 41,275 reference questions; provided 44 LaRCs; and created eight guides to subject fields within the collection. The Humanities and General Reference Department made 511 In-Wats searches; answered 35,562 reference questions; provided 26 LaRCs; conducted 20 bibliographic tours; and revised three guides to subjects within the collection. The Music Library continued its bibliographic instruction to undergraduates in expanded form; the Chemistry Library initiated a Table of Contents service to the faculty; and the Couch Library introduced a series of subject guides to the collection, producing bibliographies on horticulture and mycology.

The staff used the limited technological resources available to them to provide additional public services. The BA/SS staff conducted 824 online bibliographic searches, and the Humanities staff conducted one hundred and twenty six. The Couch Library introduced online searches for its patrons, and the Chemistry Library expanded its searches to include the NIH-EPA online service for the Chemical Information System. The Music Library, with assistance from Professor Martin Dillon of the Library School and a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities, developed an online authority control for its large collection of shape-note tunes. The microfilm collection, now under the supervision of BA/SS, experienced a 13% increase in growth and a 10% increase in use. The Undergraduate Library, after extensive preparation of the collection, installed a detection system to prevent the unauthorized circulation of books; and the audio-visual center within that library circulated 3,458 cassettes of classical music for home use, an increase of 22% over last year's circulation.

THE COLLECTIONS

From 1971-72 through 1976-77, the average annual growth of the Library's collections was 84,000 volumes; from 1978-79 through 1980-81, the average annual growth has been 126,000 volumes. This accelerated acquisitions program with virtually no additional staff has been possible only through the careful planning, efficient collecting, and innovative processing in the departments of the Technical Services Division: Bibliographic Services, Acquisitions, Cataloging, and Serials. The most striking feature of this remarkable achievement is the coordination and cooperation among the departments to address common problems. Regular consultation and collaboration have enabled them to develop procedures that reap enhanced benefits from auctions, relationships with dealers, approval plans, and opportunities to purchase complete, cohesive collections. When appropriate, the Rare Book Collection and the Manuscripts Department have contributed significantly to the program, and all collections have profited from the skill and experience of those departments. Efforts to find new methods of efficient collecting and to improve internal procedures continue.

Lying behind this sizeable effort is, of course, the State support for the materials budget, the additional funds made available by the University Administration, and the lacunae list compiled by the faculty in 1974. The funds allocated by the Chancellor's Office and the Board of Trustees deserve special mention, for they have enabled the Library to weather the rise in publishers' prices without entirely foregoing the elimination of the lacunae or seriously curtailing the addition of current publications. Similarly, a grant from the Department of Education under Title II-C of the Higher Education Act of 1965 has permitted the Library, in coordination with those of Duke University and North Carolina State University, to add special research materials, particularly in response to the needs of the National Humanities Center.

The Bibliographic Services Department has undertaken both quantitative and qualitative evaluations of the general collection to assist local selection and cooperative projects. The project's first aspect uses measurements of the shelf list to determine holdings in the various subject fields, and the staff intends to compare the data gathered with known data on three other academic libraries. A random sampling from the shelf list will reveal more detailed information on such matters as language, place and date of publication, and editions. The project also includes a comparison of samplings with established bibliographies, discipline by discipline, to assess the quality of local holdings. This effort has begun already to reveal certain strengths and weaknesses that will be extremely useful for future selection and for developing an interdependence with the other two university libraries in the Research Triangle.

The relentless increase in serials prices is the one major problem plaguing all acquisitions programs. No subject has been the object of so much study recently, but as yet, the library community has been unable to reach a solution which protects serials budgets, publishers' interests, and scholars' opportunities to publish. This staff and this faculty have been conscientious about avoiding unnecessary subscriptions. Nevertheless, increasing costs coupled with a stable State budget have necessitated the use of some special funds to support the current book budget instead of retrospective purchases, so that State funds could supplement the serials budget. This condition prompted the Administrative Board of the Library this year to request a complete survey of subscriptions to eliminate any unneeded titles and to free funds for new titles. Although a few departments were able to complete their surveys — most notably, the Chemistry Department which freed roughly $900 through cancellations — the preparation of lists for review occupied most of the year. Next year the project should advance rapidly. In order to provide an incentive for the effort, the Board determined that 80% of the money saved would revert to the departments for new titles. Library staff members will proceed under the same policy to review subscriptions assigned to funds which they administer.

In another move to provide greater control over serials, the Board established the General Sciences Committee, first recommended in Dr. Wreath's Collection Development Program in 1978. It is well established that scientific serials are the most expensive titles acquired on a continuing basis, and it had been apparent for several years that some coordination of subscriptions and control of duplications were essential. The Committee, which includes representation of the science faculties, the Board, and the science librarians, will begin to provide this coordination while arbitrating the location of certain interdisciplinary sources purchased in single copies. Almost simultaneously, the science librarians began to meet each month, on their own initiative, to consider issues related to the General Sciences Committee's responsibilities as well as other common concerns. For the first time, the Library system's organizational structure now can exercise the necessary control over these expensive materials and guide the interactions of these important services.

This generally positive picture was not without its blemishes. The Journal of the Elisha Mitchell Society, for many years a major title used to exchange for other journals, ceased to be a University Publication; and the materials formerly exchanged for it became purchased acquisitions. The transition required a minute examination of each title involved, a substantial reduction in the serials received on exchange, and orders for the residue. This major distraction coincided with an extremely poor performance by the cataloging network to which the Library belongs, OCLC, Inc. For a number of reasons, the network often was not operating or was operating at a subnormal pace, and the Cataloging Department began to accumulate an unusually large backlog of uncataloged materials. Financially, the relentless inflation in publishers' prices of the last decade continued with only slight abatement, a minor relief that was less than the added burden of a postal increase.

Certain major acquisitions during the year warrant mention here. The Rare Book Collection added several significant titles to its growing collection of sixteenth century imprints, including Oszvld Pelbrt's Stellarium corone benedictae Marie Virginis (Augsburg, 1502) and a 1505 Paris edition of Plutarch's Tria Opuscula. In the history of science, the Collection also added two sixteenth century editions of Lucretius as well as two special editions issued in the eighteenth century. Two particularly valuable additions to the Collection's Samuel Johnson collection were A Catalogue of the Valuable Library of Books, of the Learned Samuel Johnson (London, 1785) and Proposals for Printing by Subscription, the First two Volumes of Bibliotheca Harleiana (London, 1742). The Manuscripts Department purchased for the Southern Historical Collection the five volume diary of Emma Sue Gordon Perkins describing life during the Civil War, a valuable addition to the Collection's Perkins family papers; and, for its literary manuscripts collection, several George Bernard Shaw items for the Archibald Henderson Collection of Manuscripts and, with assistance from the Rare Book Collection's Whitaker Fund, a copy of Walt Whitman's November Boughs, with fifteen handwritten Whitman manuscripts tipped in. The Music Library added four seventeenth century manuscript copies of operas by Jean-Baptiste Lully and a collection of twenty-five manuscripts of instrumental music from the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries.

Friends and alumni of the University again contributed generously to the collections. Mr. George Baer continued to add to the George Baer Collection of fine bindings, books on binding, and private press books, donating fifty-eight books this year. Mr. Bernard Flatow gave three rare items to the Collection: Lodovico Ariosto, Orlando Furioso (Bilboa, 1583); Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra, Los Trabajos de Persiles y Sigismunda (Paris, 1617); and Gabriel Daniel, Viage de el Mundo de Des-cartes (Madrid, 1750). Mr. Flatow made his gift at his class's fortieth reunion and dedicated the Ariosto to Professor Emeritus Federico Gil, the Cervantes to Professor Emeritus Sterling A. Stoudemire, and the Daniel to Professor Emeritus W. Lee Wiley. Mrs. Charles Mills contributed a large collection of books to the Library, and some items among them, including eleven books by the noted illustrator, Clare Leighton, were added to the Rare Book Collection. As usual, several donors gave papers to the Southern Historical Collection. Among them were the widow of Archie Royal Davis, who donated her husband's papers, and Mrs. Leo Gardiner and Mrs. W. C. Coker, who gave a substantial addition to the James McDowell Papers. Among many other gifts, the North Carolina Collection received seventeen boxes of books which belonged to the late Hugh Talmadge Lefler, contributed by Drs. Charles D. Lefler and Hugh T. Lefler, Jr. In addition, the Collection received gifts to two major components of its holdings: the Mangum and Josephine Weeks Memorial Collection, building on the great book and pamphlet collection purchased from Stephen Weeks, Mangum Weeks' father, in 1918; and the papers of Fred Wolfe, brother of Thomas Wolfe. Both Collections will require extensive preparation before they will be available to the public but add new dimensions to the Collection's holdings. Professor Emeritus Federico Gil continued to add substantially to the segments of his professional library already donated, and retiring professor Harvey Smith of the Department of Sociology contributed a valuable working library on geriatrics that covered several disciplines.

COOPERATIVE PROJECTS

The ties long established with the library of Duke University and the more recent ones with North Carolina State University's library have become far stronger and more numerous in the last several years. Two grants for collection development under the Title II-C program mentioned earlier have prompted extensive analyses of collection strengths, collecting patterns, and allocations of areas of responsibility. The newspaper project described last year was a major advance in the total collaboration in collection development, and several projects this year, most notably the shelflist analysis and the cancellation of serials, have led to similar undertakings in the other two libraries. As knowledge of each collection grows and the development of each proceeds in coordination with the others, the opportunity to make one large resource out of the three and thereby extend the resources of each becomes a very real possibility.

The realization of the full benefit of the three libraries' proximity has never been possible because of the unavoidable difficulties in obtaining information about holdings. The Triangle Research Library Network should alleviate that problem greatly by providing a composite catalog of all three collections available through terminals in any desirable location. The development of the network continued on schedule during the year, and, near the end of the year, the award of another Title II-C grant assured its further development. When operative, the network will allow immediate access to the area's bibliographic resources for the three universities and the Research Triangle facilities of the government and private industry. Moreover, it should create a prototype that can serve the same purpose for any area in which several libraries serve a common public.

PHYSICAL FACILITIES

As in the past several years, the staff devoted large amounts of time to planning new physical facilities. This year was perhaps the most demanding of all, as work proceeded on three different projects. The detailed layouts of space and the selection of the new central library's furnishings, the structural planning and initial layouts for the renovated Wilson Library, and the plans for accommodating the special collections during the renovation of Wilson Library, all necessitated long preparations and numerous meetings. In addition, the circulation staff and the special collections' staff developed preliminary moving plans. It is a signal testimony to the dedication and abilities of the staff that they were able to carry on normal services while devoting so much time to this planning effort, the analysis of operations described in various sections of this report, the collaborative efforts with other libraries, and the program of staff development.

Five departmental libraries gained some relief from acute space problems when their departments approved expansions. The Chemistry Library increased its floor space by 30% when it occupied a recently renovated area. The Botany Department assigned some additional space to the Couch Library to create an annex for slightly more than 5,000 periodical volumes. The Art Library has a central location in the new Art Department building, now under construction. The Music Department provided space so that the Music Library, which faces the most acute shortage of space among the department libraries, could store selected sound recordings. The Brauer Library gained 1600 square feet in the attic of Phillips Hall for the storage of infrequently used materials.

FRIENDS AND CELEBRATIONS

The annual dinner of the Friends of the Library on March 19th featured Elizabeth Sewell, professor of English at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. Professor Sewell, who has published several volumes of poetry while holding a number of unusual teaching positions, spoke on "The Library as Allegory." The University Librarian took the occasion to announce the formation of the Louis Round Wilson Society, an organization limited to donors of $1,000 or more to the Louis Round Wilson Memorial Fund, an endowment for the development and maintenance of the Library's automated systems.

The Friends of the Library sponsored another series of fine lectures, under the direction of Dr. Paul Koda, Curator of Rare Books. On September 10, William G. Haynes, owner of the Ashantilly Press of Darien, Georgia, gave a talk on "Private Printing at the Ashantilly Press." On November 5, Dr. H. G. Jones, Curator of the North Carolina Collection, spoke on "The 400th Anniversary of North Carolina." On January 28th Kathy Moretto, the Council on Library Resources intern with the Library this year, gave a talk on "The Evolution of Musical Notation: Manuscripts and the Printed Book." In addition to these programs, the Rare Book Collection presented the second of the Hanes Lectures, a series funded by the Hanes Foundation for the Study of the Origin and Development of the Book. The series began last year with Ruth Mortimer's "A Portrait of the Author in Sixteenth Century France," on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Foundation's establishment. This year, Mr. G. Thomas Tanselle, Vice-President of the Guggenheim Foundation, spoke on "The History of the Book as a Field of Study." The address, which was a major contribution to historical studies of the book, appeared on June 5, 1981, in the Times Literary Supplement.

The celebration of two other half-century anniversaries occurred during the year. On October 24th, the Southern Historical Collection marked its fiftieth anniversary with a symposium featuring distinguished scholars and alumni C. Vann Woodward and Arthur S. Link. Kenan Professor of History and former Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson addressed the dinner meeting, speaking on his personal recollections of the Collection's original director, Dr. J. De Roulhac Hamilton, and its history. The Kenan family, in the person of Frank Kenan, presented a portrait of Sarah Graham Kenan, whose early subsidy to the Collection made its survival possible. It is gratifying to report that the Collection now has over eight million pieces and that a related Collection, the University Archives, has just passed the landmark of one million pieces. In May, the School of Library Science held its fiftieth anniversary with a week-long conference in which several Library staff members participated. The School presented an excellent series of talks on contemporary library issues, which added significantly to the staff's opportunities for professional development this year. It is no accident that all three of these celebrations — that of the Hanes Foundation, of the Library School, and of the Southern Historical Collection — were for valuable resources of the University, first conceived by Louis Round Wilson.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD

The Administrative Board of the Library had an unusually active year under the conscientious leadership of Professor Ernest Eliel, its Chairman. The Board continued to monitor the program of faculty fines, introduced last year, and to adjudicate appeal cases. In general, the fine system seems to have improved the circulation of the collection, reduced the number of lost books, and imposed no serious inconvenience on the faculty. The Board, recognizing the growing significance of online bibliographic searching services and the many influential implications of this relatively new reference tool, conducted an extensive study of the matter through a subcommittee selected by the Chairman and reporting to the Board. The Subcommittee's final report clearly identifies this new service's benefits and problems, indicates the serious personnel demands that it places on the Library in contrast to traditional reference service, and outlines the extensive impact which it will probably have on the Library's organization. The Chairman also established the General Sciences Committee, described earlier, and served as its first chairman. In addition to its budgetary responsibilities and its committees' work, the Board discussed and expressed concern over the staff reductions and the change in the personnel policy. This Board served an extended term, because of a re-scheduling of faculty elections, and its Chairman, in turn, served an eighteen month term. He is due the appreciation of the community for the quality as well as the length of his service.

CONCERNS

This report began with an enumeration of the problems created by the double burden of supporting manual and automated systems. It has indicated those areas in which the Library now faces these problems: online bibliographic searching, the cataloging process, and cooperative efforts with the other libraries in the Research Triangle. Only a lack of funds for automated systems has limited these areas, since information in this manageable form is essential to effective servicing of the volume of material available today. Plans should be developing now for the automation of acquisitions and serials. Unfortunately, programs of development require support beyond the costs of established services, and the cost of automated operations is not slight, involving the constant training of staff and maintenance of equipment.

The adoption of these systems has several significant implications, not the least of which is the need for greater budgetary flexibility. It will become necessary to re-assign and re-classify positions; to transfer funds from personnel budgets to systems budgets; and to share costs among institutions, within institutions, and probably across state lines. Telecommunications is seldom static and is indifferent to boundaries of any sort. It is difficult to foresee how the full value of these powerful systems can be realized if it is not possible to break through the traditional rigidities of budgetary structures.

Another, perhaps more fundamental, implication is the impact which these systems could well have on the character of university libraries. One of the major institutional challenges facing universities today is the task of gaining some rational control over the dissemination of information on campuses. With terminals and databases distributed throughout the community, a real question arises as to the definition, much less the location, of a "library." It follows that the personnel who are responsible within an institution for the acquisition, organization, and servicing of information become equally difficult to identify. Problems of duplication of effort and acquisitions, imprecise assignments of responsibility, and confusion in regard to the presence and location of certain information sources will worsen until some prevalent pattern becomes established. Some universities, with very limited success, have moved already to creating a unit crossing traditional lines and containing all information centers within the institution. But, clearly, further study will be necessary before an effective structure for the coordination and mutual support of these services will emerge.

Reports from each department and division within the Library are the basis for this attempt to present a composite view of the Library's total activities. As thorough and descriptive as those reports are each year, this distillation of them can never do justice either to their quality or to the varied activities depicted in them. The preceding narrative has attempted, at least, to reflect the creativity and dedication of the staff. That staff's energies and abilities, like the support for the collections and the physical facilities now in preparation, are one of the strong points of the Library today. With the leadership and support of the University Administration, they are fully capable of meeting the challenges of tomorrow and continuing to improve library services to the University community.

Respectfully submitted,

Annual Report of The University Library
for the Fiscal Year 1981-82
October 1, 1982

To the Chancellor of the University:

For the past several years, these reports have mentioned the unfortunate coincidence of technological opportunity and budgetary shrinkages in research libraries. Gradually, the library community during that time has been constructing the databases and communications systems that will lead in time to a national interdependence unprecedented in our history, funding the effort with federal and private grants, re-allocation of resources, and cooperative enterprise. The concept of a service center has begun to replace the goal of a self-sufficient repository among libraries, and the slogan "access, not local ownership" has gained widespread currency. Tentative efforts to evaluate services as opposed to counting holdings as a basis for ranking libraries have appeared in statistical reports, and the sharing of collections through these new means of communication has become one of the principal issues facing academic librarians.

The next logical step in this evolution was to examine the means of conveying material from one library to another. It has long been clear that the old modes of transporting material, the U.S. Postal Service or some mechanical substitute, simply would not be adequate to function in tandem with sophisticated telecommunications systems. Development of electronic "document delivery" systems has been underway for some years, but in 1982, it began to emerge as an area of practical experimentation. Several research libraries in the country are conducting studies of the possible transmission of texts by videodisc, electronic digital transmission, video cable, and other devices. This technological transmission would permit a reader in a remote location, ideally, to identify a desired text through a database, to request its transmission, and to read the transmission without leaving the initial location. While this technology is still in the early stages of bibliographic applications, its implications for scholarship, resource-sharing, and libraries, are clearly significant.

Unfortunately, the systems for document delivery are, if anything, more costly than the telecommunications systems, while the libraries' resources are now barely sufficient to maintain traditional services. It appears that commercial and governmental agencies will have to develop virtually all of this technology. The Library of Congress and the National Library of Medicine are experimenting with it, and numerous firms in the information science industry are doing the same. Meanwhile, academic librarians are trying valiantly to maintain the concept of bibliographic service centers, even as reduced budgets prevent or delay further applications of automation. These new technologies, with their huge potential for increasing access to libraries' holdings, expand but do not replace traditional services and thus absorb additional, not re-allocated, resources. In short, the gathering, organizing, and disseminating of information—the historical role of libraries and now the basis for a burgeoning industry—is becoming increasingly expensive as well as vastly more complex today. Somehow research universities must find ways to provide these new benefits to their faculties and students.

THE STAFF

The introduction of rapid technological change has dramatically intensified the constant learning process which working in a research library has always required. Public service staffs must stay abreast of new systems for circulation and additional databases for bibliographic searching. Technical service staffs have been adapting to changes in automated acquisitions and cataloging for some years. While far more demanding and unforgiving than manual systems, the automated systems provide information in greater detail more readily than would ever be possible with the older systems. One valuable product of all these technological applications is the management information that is now becoming available to library administrators; and as these applications spread throughout a library's operations, this information will become broader and will affect fundamentally the direction and organization of libraries.

Locally, the Library's staff has had to accommodate the added challenge of developing cooperative efforts in the Research Triangle which have encompassed innovations in both automated systems and traditional services. These efforts have required the staff's broad participation in the various committees drawn from the three libraries. The online union catalog's specifications, like the refinements in long-standing cooperative efforts ranging from circulation to collection development, have involved a wide representation of staff members. These experiences, while absorbing time and energy, have proved to be broadening for individual librarians and crucial to the variety of cooperative efforts now supported by the area's three research libraries. The harmony and effectiveness with which these groups have worked together and the successful organizational structure which they have created are by no means the least of their achievements.

As in the past six years, the Librarians' Association sponsored and organized a Spring conference for the instruction of librarians in the area.

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA LIBRARY

Held in March, the conference this year was on the topic, "The New Technology: Issues and Implications," and featured talks by Gerald Lundeen of the Graduate School of Library and Information Science at the University of Hawaii; Norman Shaffer of the Library of Congress; Joe Hewitt of the University Library; Elizabeth Stone, Dean of the School of Library and Information Science at the Catholic University of America and current president of the American Library Association; Anton Pierce of the library at Virginia Polytechnic and State University; and Toni Bearman, Executive Director, National Commission on Libraries and Information Science. Associate Dean Fred Roper of the University's School of Library Science gave a summary report at the close of the conference. A committee chaired by Bernice Bergup of the Humanities Reference Department and composed of Gillian Debreczeny of the Undergraduate Library, James Dickerson of the Chemistry Library, Celine Noel of the Cataloging Department, Richard Shrader of the Manuscripts Department, and Cynthia Adams of the Humanities Reference Department, planned and arranged the meeting.

The staff's professional growth is also evident in their publishing record and their prominence in organizations outside the Library. A list of staff publications is appended to this report. Staff participation in external organizations was both varied and broad. Joe Hewitt, Associate University Librarian for Technical Services, served on OCLC's Users' Council. David Taylor, Undergraduate Librarian, was a member of the Faculty Council. Louise McG. Hall, Head of the Humanities Reference Department, served on the Faculty Council, on the Faculty Nominating Committee, and as chair of the Faculty Grievance Committee. Michelle H. Neal of that department served on the North Carolina Library Association's Library Resources Committee and on the North Carolina SOLINET Users' Group's Nominating Committee. Donna Cornick of the Business Administration and Social Sciences Reference Department was elected Vice-President/President Elect of the North Carolina On-line Users' Group; Patricia Langelier of the same Department was Secretary-Treasurer of the North Carolina Library Association's Documents Section; and Diane Strauss, Head of the Department, was President of the North Carolina Special Libraries Association. H.G. Jones, Curator of the North Carolina Collection, was Secretary of the American Association for State and Local History, a member of the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, and a member of the North Carolina Historical Commission. Dr. Jones received the Waldo Gifford Leland Prize, awarded by the Society of American Archivists for the best American book on archival history, theory, and practice, for his Local Government Records, published in 1980. Alice Cotten, Assistant Curator of the North Carolina Collection, was Associate Editor of the NC/SLA Bulletin, became book editor of North Carolina Libraries, and was elected to the seventy-five member Historical Society of North Carolina. Carolyn Wallace, Curator of the Manuscripts Department, served on the North Carolina Historical Records Advisory Commission, was elected Vice-President of the North Carolina Literary and Historical Association, was a member of the North Carolina Highway Marker Commission, and was named a Fellow of the Society of American Archivists. Margaret Lospinuso, Music Librarian, served on the Board of Directors of the Music Library Association; and Marcia Tuttle, Periodicals Librarian, served as past Chair of the Resources and Technical Services Division's Serials Section of the American Library Association and as a member of the Esther J. Percy Award Jury. Rodger Harris, Head of the Cataloging Department, became Chair of the Association of College and Research Libraries' Statistical Committee, and Margaretta Yarborough of that Department became Secretary of the Archives Committee of the North Carolina Library Association. Abraham Yu served on the Association of Asian Studies' Technical Services Subcommittee, and Rafael Coutin served on SALALM's Subcommittee on Cataloging and Bibliographic Technology, its OCLC Users' Committee, and its Committee on Cuban Bibliography. Nancy White finished her term as a Carrboro Alderman in December. James C. Winstead, of the Physical Plant Department, received a C. Knox Massey Award for Distinguished Service to the University. Mr. Winstead, while not officially a member of the Library staff, is certainly an honorary member, having worked diligently throughout the building for years to keep it presentable.

As usual, a number of significant staff changes occurred during the year. D. Clifton Brock, Associate University Librarian for Public Services, moved to the new position of Associate University Librarian for the Special Collections. Janet Flowers became Head of the Acquisitions Department, replacing William Z. Schenck, who became Head of Collection Department at the University of Oregon. Carol Leadenham, Slavic Bibliographer, resigned to accompany her husband to a new assignment in California, and Nadyezdha Zilper, formerly Slavic Cataloger, replaced her. Edward Davis succeeded Ms. Zilper as Slavic Cataloger. Faye Phillips resigned as Technical Services Archivist in the Manuscripts Department to become Director of the Troup County Historical Society and Archives in LaGrange, Georgia; and Janifer Thompson, Microform Reference Librarian, resigned from the Business Administration and Social Sciences Reference Department to pursue a doctorate at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana. Page Life became Romance Language Cataloger, Margaretta Yarborough became Cataloger of English Language Mono-graphs, and Jerry Cotten became Photographic Archivist in the North Carolina Collection.

THE COLLECTIONS

The Library's efforts to maintain its collections' growth was successful largely because of a thirty percent increase in the materials budget to cover, at least in part, the past five years' increases in publishers' prices. In addition, the Bibliographic Services Department, in close coordination with the Serials Department and the Acquisitions Department, has continued to refine efficient uses of staff and funds to identify and acquire large collections of materials. To some degree, these joint efforts, like the growing collaboration between the Acquisitions Department and the Cataloging Department, reflect changes stemming from new systems of communication. The Technical Services Division's imaginative responses to this new environment unquestionably will continue and may result eventually in fundamental re-organizations of certain functions. These responses and the dedication of an able staff permitted the Acquisitions Department to process 28% more orders than last year.

A logical corollary to this approach to collection development is the continuing examination of the collections which the Bibliographic Services Department sustains. This year, the Department completed an extensive analysis of the shelf list to identify weaknesses and strengths, completed a thorough review of foreign exchange programs, continued to press the cooperative collection development program with Duke University, and initiated a program to coordinate the library system's selection in subject areas which are common to several academic disciplines, e.g., photography. The Periodicals Department, working closely with the bibliographers, continued the review of subscriptions, cancelling journals now considered to be dispensable. All these efforts will provide a more detailed knowledge of the collections' shape and character for future decisions in adding to them.

The effective collection management described above did have one unfortunate result. It and the inadequate performance of OCLC that continued from the previous year into the first half of this year produced an unprecedented backlog of uncataloged volumes. The introduction of a new cataloging code (AACR-II) added to the problem, widely shared by research libraries nationally. It may well be that a permanent backlog will become common in these libraries. In an attempt to reduce the local one, the Cataloging Department transferred two staff members from the reclassification project and made arrangements to catalog any item specifically requested. Nevertheless, the situation remains a source of some chagrin and deep concern to a staff that has prided itself on the currency of its cataloging.

The maintenance of the collections' growth at the rate achieved in recent years faces a number of new obstacles. Understaffing in the Acquisitions and Cataloging Departments and the extraordinary inflation in publishers' prices have long been relentless problems. The malfunctioning of the cataloging network has now introduced another external, uncontrollable difficulty. The conversion of many government documents from hard copy to microfiche—the count is down 6,000 volumes in this category this year—as well as a similar conversion for University theses and dissertations further diminishes the statistical evidence of additions to the collections. All these pressures may increase and further retard apparent indications of the collections' growth.

A list of notable acquisitions and gifts is appended to this report. Nevertheless, three gifts among them cannot pass without additional mention. Emeritus Professor Clifford P. Lyons and his wife, Gladys, gave the Rare Book Collection a large collection of Robert Frost materials, with many autographed presentation copies of published titles and others with handwritten poems which were early, unpublished versions of poems later published. The North Carolina Collection received the books and papers of the Mangum and Josephine Weeks estate and will eventually be the recipient of the income from the trust fund established by the estate. Finally, Mrs. J. Charles Morrow donated to the Rare Book Collection a nineteenth century binder's backing press, which, while not adding to the collections directly, will certainly assist efforts to preserve them.

SERVICES

One of the most effective, if one of the less prominent, devices for bringing the public in touch with a library's resources is the subject bibliography based on the holdings of that particular library. The University Library has a long history of providing excellent guides to collections, and it is gratifying to report that the present staff vigorously maintains that tradition. Several public service units, most notably the two reference departments, invested substantial time and effort in revising earlier guides and creating new ones on subject subdivisions within their own collections. These guides are clearly helpful to undergraduate and graduate students, but they can also be useful to senior faculty members in providing lists of the most recent reference and bibliographic works and of additions to the Library's collections.

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA LIBRARY

This same commitment to extending the Library's resources to patrons is evident in all the public service departments during the past year, as a sampling from their annual reports demonstrates. The Undergraduate Library, now in its fourth year of offering the Term Paper Clinic, has experienced a 63% increase in the use of that service over last year. The Humanities Reference Department answered 21,227 reference questions, prepared 21 LaRCs, provided 20 online bibliographic searches for patrons, conducted 13 bibliographic tours, and gave four classroom presentations. The Business Administration and Social Sciences Reference Department completed 46,727 reference transactions, conducted 133 bibliographic lectures and tours, provided 870 online bibliographic searches, and prepared 54 LaRCs. The North Carolina Collection answered 13,812 reference questions and made materials available to visitors representing 75 American and 16 foreign universities. Both the Circulation Department and the Rare Book Collection set new records in circulation, and the University Archives experienced a 38% increase in the use of those records. It is clear from these reports that all the collections of the Library are heavily used and that the staff is providing imaginative service to meet the needs of patrons.

FACILITIES

Planning for the renovation of Wilson Library and the selection of the new central library's furniture and equipment continued and occupied substantial amounts of the staff's time during the year. The Board of Trustees named the new building in honor of Walter R. Davis, Chairman of the Board when the project was authorized. Detailed plans for moving into the building have now taken shape, and the staff committee with the responsibility for those plans is regularly reviewing them. The committee is also examining possible methods of keeping the community informed as to the status of the move, now expected to occur in early 1983.

Both architects of the Davis Library's design received exceptional recognition at the 1982 meeting of the American Institute of Architecture in Honolulu. Ronaldo Giurgola of Mitchell/Giurgola of New York and Philadelphia, the firm associated with the principal firm of the project, received the AIA's Golden Award, given on rare occasions to an architect whose corpus over an entire career warrants special recognition. In a survey to determine the best contemporary American architect, Mr. Giurgola was second only to I.M. Pei in the estimation of deans of architecture schools. Leslie N. Boney, Jr., senior partner of Leslie N. Boney Architect, Inc. of Wilmington, the principal firm of the project, received the Kemper Award at the AIA's meeting. The Institute gives the award for outstanding service to the profession in the previous year.

FRIENDS OF THE LIBRARY

The Friends of the Library once again offered a series of interesting programs in addition to the annual dinner. Coordinated by the Rare Book Collection staff, the talks this year were given by Edmund Fuller, book review editor of the Wall Street Journal, on the art of the book reviewing; by Frances Weaver and Jerry Cotten of the Library staff on Thomas Wolfe, based on the Library's Wolfe materials; and by Milton Carothers, Chairman of the Friends, on his personal collection of Bibles. Professor John Hope Franklin, who spent the year at the National Humanities Center before joining the Duke University faculty, addressed the annual dinner on the topic, "Politics and the Public Library: A Personal View." Mr. Carothers finished his term as Chairman after three years of active and valuable service to the organization, and Douglas Eyre of the Geography Department was chosen to succeed him. Later in the year, Frances Weaver became the Executive Secretary of the Friends, replacing William Z. Schenck, who has spent several years ably discharging the responsibilities of that post.

ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD OF THE LIBRARY

The Administrative Board of the Library in recent years has tended increasingly to function through committees established to examine specific problems or to monitor its continuous responsibilities. These committees, which report back to the Board on their activities and for action by the entire membership, had an active year. The recently established Committee on Computer Readable Services closely examined the implications, problems, and potentialities of online bibliographic searching as a reference service. At the Librarian's request, the Board, through an ad hoc committee, framed and approved a policy statement on the free selection of and open access to all research materials. Another committee continued to monitor the faculty fines program, which seems to be causing minimal inconvenience and is effectively improving the circulation of books. A Board committee has begun study of possible actions to make the move from Wilson Library to Davis Library as undistruptive as possible for students and faculty. Both the Manuscripts and the Research Fund Committees authorized a number of significant purchases, which appear in the list at the end of this report.

* * *

Perhaps it is not necessary to say again that this summation of the departmental reports does not do justice to the Library staff's activities during the past year, as it cannot in the space allotted. It is little short of astonishing, however, to review the additional responsibilities assumed by the staff in recent years: the establishment of a systematic collection development program with centralized selection; the creation of a literary manuscripts program; the assimilation of automated cataloging; the planning for a new central library and for the renovation of Wilson Library; the introduction of online bibliographic searching; the development of the Triangle Research Libraries Network and an online catalog for this campus; the creation and maintenance of several series of lectures and workshops for its own instruction and that of other librarians in the area and for interested members of the University community; the absorption of an increase of approximately 60% in annual acquisitions; and a dramatic increase in publication and participation in professional organizations. All these activities are, of course, in addition to the services offered prior to that period. This record clearly demonstrates that the staff has the ability to meet the challenges described at the beginning of this report and, with adequate support and recognition, to keep the Library in the forefront of American research libraries.

Annual Report of the University Library
for the Fiscal Year 1982-83
November 1, 1983

To the Chancellor of the University:

Computer technology continues to broaden its influence over research libraries' operations. During this past year, microcomputers were the center of attention, and by the year's end, many major universities were planning to employ this new tool extensively to support their instructional and scholarly programs. The microcomputer is already becoming commonplace as a personal computer, and this phenomenon, like its institutional use, has fundamental if undefined implications for research libraries. It is not clear how visitors to libraries will use microcomputers located there or if librarians can serve students and researchers who use them to retrieve information at locations outside the library. It is abundantly clear, on the other hand, that these new approaches to learning and information will require librarians to have somewhat different skills and to assume different responsibilities from what has been true traditionally. This challenge already has prompted widespread discussion among librarians, most notably in several conferences sponsored by the Council on Library Resources, which has done so much to keep research libraries abreast of changes in librarianship.

The adoption of this technology has had another, equally clear result: libraries are much more subject to commercial interests and the marketplace than they have ever been before. Library patrons have long been accustomed to "free" services, but it is now becoming increasingly necessary to charge patrons the costs of individual services imposed by external agencies. Moreover, costs for automation, whether levied by a network of libraries or a commercial service, are virtually uncontrollable. In the past, a library could forego the purchase of a book or postpone the addition of equipment. Dependence on computer services is often complete and unremitting, so that an individual library has little if any freedom to regulate its participation. Yet the capabilities purchased from these agencies are indispensable to meeting a modern university's requirements for information, and research libraries today have no choice but to provide them. Among other things, the computer unquestionably has diminished libraries' control over both information and budgets.

Escalating costs, combined with libraries' changing role within universities, argue for a re-examination of the standard for library support accepted fifty years or more ago. That standard established 5% of the General and Education Budget as adequate funding for academic libraries, but, in fact, few research libraries actually have received that level of support in the past. Furthermore, if a university library ever contributed as little as 5% to an institution's academic programs, certainly that is no longer true. Much criticism of libraries' deficient services is answered by this long history of inadequate funding. The gap between expectations and support is widening steadily, and the research library community has growing concern over it. That concern prompted the Office of Management Studies of the Association of Research Libraries to hold a conference to discuss the economics of research libraries, and for the next two years, the Council on Library Resources will conduct an exhaustive study of the subject. Perhaps these and similar efforts will bring some alleviation of the burgeoning challenge posed by research libraries' costs today.

SERVICES

This year the Planning Committee considered these and other issues while analyzing the changing nature of local library services. The result was a document entitled "The Library in Five Years" which the Department Heads reviewed this Spring. The Committee is now revising the document to reflect that review, preparatory to disseminating it to the University community. The study, prompted in part by the impending occupation of the Walter Royal Davis Library, is just one major effort to keep the community informed about the Library. Another is Library Notes, the excellent monthly publication edited by David Taylor, now being sent during the academic year to every faculty member rather than throughout the calendar year to each academic department. This new schedule and distribution responds to a survey conducted in 1981-82 following an experimental program sponsored by the Association of Research Libraries and the American Association for the Advancement of the Humanities and using the national publication, Library Issues.

Working closely with the freshman English program, the Undergraduate Library instruction program reached 6295 students this year. Similar instruction specifically designed for graduate students is available to any interested group in the Humanities Reference Department and Business Administration/Social Sciences Reference Department, as well as in the departmental libraries. The Undergraduate Library is now experimenting with an Apple II+ microcomputer providing self-instruction in library usage for students, and the BA/SS Department is offering a slide-tape presentation on computer searching. The Undergraduate Library's consultations on term papers have steadily become more popular, so that now the staff has compiled research strategies for 376 separate topics. Similarly, the Library Assisted Research Consultation, created to provide a comparable service for graduate students, continues to be in constant demand. The Microform Reading Room's staff, conscious that the rich resources there are not receiving the use that their quality warrants, broadened their efforts to acquaint the public with the collection's strengths through exhibits, printed guides, and bibliographies. Simultaneously, they initiated a year's study of their patrons to guide their planning for more responsive service and collection development.

These instructional efforts undoubtedly contributed to the increasing use of the Library. The general circulation rose 20% over last year, and reference service grew by 33%. Computer searching, now available in six different locations, increased 36%. The use of non-print material increased by 26%, and that of microforms increased by nearly 20%. The Manuscripts Department accommodated 1057 visiting scholars, representing 129 American colleges and universities and eight foreign countries. Overall use of manuscripts rose by 33%. The North Carolina Collection had patrons from 81 American institutions and ten foreign countries.

The upcoming year offers an opportunity to review all the Library's public services and patrons' needs. The Office of Management Studies of the Association of Research Libraries (ARL) selected the Library as one of six to evaluate their public services. The program, funded by the General Electric Foundation, is, in part, an attempt to balance recent emphasis on technical services, especially in regard to technology. The Study Team, the group who will supervise the project, consists of Cynthia Adams and Bernice Bergup of the Humanities Reference Department, Neily Conrad of the Zoology Library, Gillian Debreczeny of the Undergraduate Library, Timothy Dempsey and Donna Cornick of the BA/SS Reference Department, Patricia Buck Dominguez of the Collection Development Department, James Laney of the Serials Department, and Karen S. Seibert, Associate University Librarian for Public Services, chair. The Team, appointed in June, will create Task Forces to investigate the issues involved and, following these investigations, will submit recommendations next Fall to the library administration.

COLLECTIONS

The collection development program, like those of many institutions, experienced some difficulty this year because of funding uncertainties. The book budget suffered a loss at the outset, when an inflationary increase of $321,311 had to be reduced by $213,000. More damaging than that reversion, however, was another which occurred unexpectedly in January. Generally, the programs created by the Collection Development Department were sufficiently strong to withstand this sudden loss of an additional $223,286. The Department was able to reallocate the remaining funds and to put priorities on orders to maintain balanced growth. Two major elements of the acquisitions originally planned, serials/standing orders and block purchases of subject collections, were still in process, in many instances, when the impoundment of funds took effect. The unavoidable cancellation of these items created an unfortunate imbalance — and permanent losses of the subject collections — so that any additional funds available in 1983–84 will have to cover these areas primarily.

The ability to respond so well to such an emergency is directly due to the firm control over selection and ordering procedures and the detailed knowledge of the collections' strengths and weaknesses that the Department has attained. This year computer programs designed by Willy Owen of the Department further refined both. The bibliographers now have current and detailed data on the titles, the rate of growth, and the percentage of titles, in each Library of Congress class. In addition, the Serials Department, collaborating with the bibliographers, thoroughly reviewed the Library's general exchange programs, serials, and standing orders, areas that previously had not received the analytical attention given the monographic collection. Finally, an analysis of interlibrary loans, including the National Humanities Center's requests, has helped to identify the areas in which local collections require strengthening.

In the continuing effort to coordinate the growth of their collections, the collection development staffs of Duke University, North Carolina State University, and the University libraries regularly consult on the problems involved. The major — and growing — difficulty now is the institutions' introduction of specialties which violate the cooperative agreements reached fifty years ago. This trend, like the development of a shared online catalog, simply emphasizes the necessity for the three libraries to formulate some accommodation in circulation policies, transportation, and document delivery, that will meet the requirements of a scholar located on a campus other than the one possessing the collection of his specialization. Nonetheless, no arrangement can overcome totally the disadvantages for such a scholar, and plainly none of the libraries can develop a collection that has lain outside its responsibility for fifty years. For these reasons, as well as for the savings which prompted the original agreements, institutional adherence to the original agreements is still highly desirable.

Generous benefactors enabled the Library to bring its resources to patrons' attention. Members of the Physics Department's faculty created a collection of preprints in Brauer Library, even though the Library could offer them no financial support. Mr. Bowman Gray III, a member of the Board of Trustees and an alumnus, and members of his family donated $10,000 to fund an inventory of the Rare Book Collection's World War I and World War II posters, a gift years ago from Mr. Gray's father. The National Endowment for the Humanities awarded the Library a grant to catalog more than 21,000 separately printed Spanish and Catalan plays. Drs. William Ilgen and Rafael Coutin of the Latin American and Iberian Biblio-Center will direct the project.

One loyal benefactor has been enriching a specialized but vital collection over the past decade. In 1973, Elbert Clemmons, an alumnus and former officer of the IBM Company, established a fund to support the "Elbert Clemmons Collection for Oriental Studies" "to improve, expand, and enrich educational experiences for students and faculty of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, North Carolina, in the area of Oriental Studies." The Clemmons Fund has increased the Library's East Asian holdings by more than 1,000 titles and 2,600 volumes. Mr. Clemmons' fund has been invaluable because it has supported the University's resources in an area that might have received far less attention otherwise. Equally importantly, it has enabled the Library to obtain many rare and scholarly titles that could not have been acquired without his help. Undoubtedly, in the decades ahead, many students and faculty members will have occasion to appreciate his generosity.

An unusual opportunity presented itself this year when the John Edwards Memorial Collection became available. The Collection, located in recent years at The University of California at Los Angeles, contains books, journals, scores, and recordings, which provide a virtually complete history of Southern music from 1920 to 1970. The Library purchased the Collection, gathered by a young Australian, John Edwards, over many years, through the good offices of Professor Dan Patterson of the Folklore Curriculum. Eventually, the recordings and taped interviews, at least, will form part of the Southern recorded collection destined for the Media Center in the renovated Wilson Library.

The Manuscripts Department added 700,000 items, largely because the staff travelled 6,000 miles to solicit and acquire collections. Unquestionably another reason for this substantial growth was several donors' enlightened contribution of funds to process the papers which they had donated. This valuable assistance was particularly notable in retired Congressman L.H. Fountain's gift, a grant from the Alexander Worth McAlister Foundation, and a grant from the Allard K. Lowenstein Foundation to process Mr. Lowenstein's papers. Mrs. Jennifer Lowenstein Littlefield's selection of the Library as the archive to receive Mr. Lowenstein's papers was highly gratifying, and Chancellor Fordham's vital support for their re-location testified to the institution's appreciation. Douglass Hunt, John L. Sanders, and James C. Wallace, friends of Mr. Lowenstein from their days as University undergraduates, conducted a fund-raising campaign that significantly increased the Foundation's grant and the Chancellor's special allocation.

Robert C. Coles, well-known psychiatrist who has written extensively on Appalachia, informed the Manuscript Department that he was donating his papers to their holdings. The Department also received an important addition to the papers of Walker Percy, distinguished novelist and an alumnus of the University, on permanent loan. Mr. George A. London, another alumnus and former chairman of the Friends of the Library, established the London Family Fund as an endowment to support the Southern Historical Collection.

The North Carolina Collection also made significant strides in processing collections already held. The National Endowment for the Humanities provided funds that permitted new and improved physical provisions as well as more descriptive cataloging for approximately 20,000 historic photographs. The Collection's Photographic Services Section filmed its extensive file of newspaper clippings, used the Copyflo to convert the film to hard copy, and bound these sheets in 354 volumes covering 8,500 subjects and 13,000 biographies. The Collection added 12,664 manuscripts, mostly from the Thomas Wolfe and Fred Wolfe collections. Trust funds permitted the cataloging of the Thomas Wolfe Collection, including 360 new titles, to be completed, and for the first time, this well-known body of Wolfeiana is under proper controls.

STAFF

Four major administrative changes occurred this year. Karen S. Seibert, formerly Head, Reference Services, the University of Illinois at Chicago, became Associate University Librarian for Public Services. Ms. Siebert succeeded Clifton Brock, who became Associate University Librarian for the Special Collections, a newly created position. Janet Flowers, formerly Assistant Head of the Acquisitions Department, became Head of the Department. Mary Ishaq, formerly Assistant Head of the Humanities Reference Department, became Acting Head of the Department when Louise McG. Hall retired in January.

Ms. Hall's retirement marked the end of an era in the Library. She had been a staff member for 37 years in a variety of capacities ranging from reference librarian to Acting University Librarian. She spent most of those years as Head of the Humanities Reference Department, establishing an excellent training program for all her staff members, providing unparalleled service to the Humanities faculties and their students, and creating an extraordinary collection within the Department and adding substantially to the enrichment of the general collection. Her presence undoubtedly was a major reason for the University's strong humanistic reputation in recent decades. But Miss Hall did not limit her contribution to her assigned tasks. Her long-standing prominence in the American Association of University Professors' local chapter and her service on the Faculty Council are but two manifestations of her broader concern for the University's general welfare. It is gratifying to report that shortly after her retirement she received one of the C. Knox Massey Distinguished Service Awards.

One quite fruitful trend in recent years has been an increase in interdepartmental consultation and cooperation. Contemporary efforts in public services and collection development require this sort of communication perhaps more than past circumstances did. It is a tendency that automated systems support and encourage, readily crossing all organizational lines as they do. This year significant benefits stemmed from closer working relationships between the Humanities Reference Department and the Business Administration/Social Sciences Reference Department and the former with the Collection Development Department. Similarly, the Serials Department has initiated a weekly conference with the Acquisitions Department and the Collection Development Department, while exchanging staff members with the Serials Cataloging Section to improve each's knowledge of the other's operations. The Technical Services Division, recognizing this need for better communications among Departments and Divisions, expanded the Acquisitions Department's publication Ax Fax to cover the entire Division's activities, re-named the monthly publication TSIB (Technical Services Information Bulletin), and began to issue it to all units in the Library system.

Work on the Triangle Research Libraries Network continued to absorb a large amount of the staff's time. The various committees, composed of representation from the libraries of Duke University and North Carolina State University as well as the Library, met throughout the year. The cooperative work of these committees and the common solutions which they have reached are as unusual and valuable an achievement as the system itself. The project received another grant under the Title II-C program of the Higher Education Act of 1965; and by the year's end, the technical staff, guided by the committees, had completed the specifications for the display screen of the online catalog, had begun production of the second and revised COM catalog, and were constructing the indexes for the system.

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA LIBRARY

Recent discussions have caused a major change in scheduling the project's development. It is now apparent that all three libraries urgently need an online circulation system, and developing that module of the system has supplanted refining the online catalog as the next stage of development, once the catalog becomes operative. After the circulation system's implementation, the staff will return to further development of the catalog, creation of an online acquisitions system, and possible linkages to other libraries. A committee representing the three libraries has begun analyzing the design of a system capable of accommodating the circulation policies and circumstances of the three campuses.

It has become apparent that TRLN now requires a more formal organizational structure and governance than the informal arrangements under which it has functioned thus far. The three library directors established an Organization Committee, which proposed a new structure this Spring; and the directors expanded their membership to include the directors of the Health Sciences Libraries at Duke and Chapel Hill, and the directors of the Law and Business Libraries at Duke. This larger group then reviewed and revised the Committee's proposal and were preparing to submit that revision to their respective university administrations as the year closed. Simultaneously, they were considering various approaches to the necessary financial arrangements for shared staff and equipment.

The staff, as always, rendered a variety of services to the University, the State, and the region beyond their primary duties. Several members of the staff continued their teaching in the School of Library Science and in the Extension Division. Ridley Kessler, a regional coordinator of U.S. Documents Depository libraries, chaired a committee to create a Statewide plan for those libraries. William Burk consulted at the Institute of Marine Sciences in Morehead City, advising that organization on its library's current operations and future development. Louise McG. Hall and Patricia Buck Dominguez served on the Faculty Council; and Janet Flowers served both as a Council member and as a representative to the Faculty Assembly, the elected faculty representatives from the University's sixteen campuses.

Staff members continued to be prominent in State and national organizations. Timothy Dempsey was one of the founders of the Microcomputer User's Group for Libraries in North Carolina. Margaret Lospinuso served another year on the Music Library Association's Board of Directors. Roger Harris was again chair of the American Library Association's (ALA) College and University Statistics Committee of the Library Administration and Management Association. Marcia Tuttle has been nominated for President of the Resources and Technical Services Division of ALA, and Joe Hewitt served as a member of the Board of that Division. Dr. Hewitt also continued as a SOLINET representative on the OCLC Users' Council, and Ms. Seibert was elected to the ALA Council.

In March, the Librarians' Association held its seventh annual conference, attended by 115 librarians from the region. This year's topic was "Management of Resources: Today and Tomorrow," and the speakers were Nina Matheson, the National Library of Medicine; Jay Lucker, Director of the MIT Libraries; Allen Kent, Associate Dean of Library and Information Sciences at the University of Pittsburgh; Thomas V. Litzenburg, President of Salem College; and Anne K. Beaubian, Director, Michigan Information Transfer Service. Thomas W. Lambeth, Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation; Kent R. Mullikin, the National Humanities Center; and Donald M. Woods, Office of Research Services at the University; constituted a panel that discussed alternate funding sources. In the final session, Karen S. Seibert, Associate University Librarian for Public Services, summarized the meeting. The committee responsible for arranging the conference included Helen Miller of the Acquisitions Department, Nancy Boone of the Catalog Department, Dana Sally of the Brauer Library, David Sheaves of the Department of Maternal and Child Health in the School of Public Health, Abraham Yu of the Collection Development Department, Sharon Gleim of the Serials Department, and Beth Mullaney, chair, of the Circulation Department.

William B. Todd, the Mildred Caldwell and Baine Perkins Kerr Centennial Professor in English History and Culture at the University of Texas, gave the third Hanes Lecture, sponsored by the Rare Book Collection, in September. Professor Todd spoke on "The Gutenberg Bible: New Evidence of the Original Printing." The Collection printed the lecture, as it had the previous two, and A.B. Bookman's Weekly in this country and Aus Dem Antiquariat in Europe reprinted it. This series has now achieved undeniable distinction with Professor Todd's lecture and its two predecessors, Ruth Mortimer's "A Portrait of the Author In Sixteenth Century France" and G. Thomas Tanselle's "The History of Books as a Field of Study." The lectures, like the Collection itself, provide an unusual resource for the University community.

FACILITIES

The failure to complete the Walter Royal Davis Library this year keenly disappointed the entire University community. The staff used the year to refine and to adapt their moving plans, and Ms. Seibert chaired a newly established Task Force to acquaint the community with the new building. Revised scheduling now calls for the move to begin in early January. Bids on Wilson Library's renovation, submitted in June, were returned to contractors for later submission. The merger of the Couch and Zoology libraries, as one aspect of the Botany and Zoology Departments' merger, had to be abandoned because adequate funds for the necessary renovation were not available. At present, the libraries are planning only a limited renovation. Postponement, however, did not typify all library construction during the year. The Art Library moved into its new quarters in the new Art Building, and the Brauer Library occupied additional space provided those collections in Phillips Hall.

THE FRIENDS OF THE LIBRARY

The Friends of the Library, under the chairmanship of Professor Douglas Eyre of the Geography Department, had a particularly gratifying year. Ms. Mathilde M. Parlett, who received a doctorate in English from the University in 1932 and had lived in other locations subsequently, left the Friends' organization $108,000 upon her death in September. The Executive Committee determined that the bequest, by far the largest fund ever available to the organization, should become an endowment. As usual, Paul Koda, Curator of the Rare Book Collection, arranged for a series of lectures sponsored by the Friends: Dr. Koda described the Rare Book Collection on September 29; Richard Hendel, Assistant Director and Design and Production Manager for the University of North Carolina Press, discussed book design on November 10; and Townsend Ludington, award-winning biographer of John Dos Passos, recounted the writing of his book on January 20. On March 31, Professor David Beers Quinn of the University of Liverpool and the National Humanities Center addressed the annual dinner meeting on "The Roanoke Colonies After 400 Years."

THE ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD OF THE LIBRARY

This year the Board again considered the major issues confronting the library administration. They took an active interest in the new building's status and, at their last meeting, took a tour through it. They expressed deep concern over the Library's budgetary reductions and studied the new proposals for a more restrictive copyright law. The Board committees for Serials, General Science, the Research Fund, and Manuscripts authorized a number of acquisitions, many of which appear in the list of significant purchases at the end of this report. The Committee on Computer Readable

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA LIBRARY

Services was re-named the Committee on New Technologies and produced a report concerning the Library's purchase of machine-readable data. A list of the members of the Board is appended to this report.

* * * * *

This year, like last year, has had its disappointments: budgetary reductions, loss of staff positions, and further delays in occupying the Davis Library. The Library staff have absorbed these reverses and continued to expand and enrich library service to the University. As the preceding report reveals, this service has grown both in volume and in kind, while the collections are approaching a total of three million volumes, despite reduced acquisitions and cataloging staffs. It is therefore all the more gratifying that a survey by the University Committee on Priorities revealed that the faculty ranked the Library's resources as a strength of the University as a research institution second only to the quality of the faculty. In all probability, those surveyed took the term "Library resources" to mean primarily the collections, but it is eminently clear that the Library's greatest resource is its staff.

Annual Report of the University Library
for the Fiscal Year 1983-84
November 1, 1984

To the Chancellor of the University:

Recent annual reports have begun by stressing the tensions which research libraries are experiencing as they introduce technological change while traditional services continue undiminished. Those tensions reached their extremities this year when the urgency of preserving paper materials and the threat of rising telecommunications costs came to the fore coincidentally. Librarians have known for years that the deterioration of the papers manufactured since the late nineteenth century was becoming a massive problem, but it has taken those years for broader attention to the difficulty to focus and for systematic approaches to it to emerge. Now it is a pervasive concern of all major library agencies, and this year several programs for a national effort to meet the problem appeared. At the same time, the divestiture of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company threatened libraries, now so dependent on electronic networks, with sharp increases in costs. Some estimates of the additional costs were as high as 60%, in a budget line that is already sizeable, having grown steadily over the past decade. It is clear that if these estimates prove true, most libraries will have to reduce support in other areas severely to accommodate these costs.

While the immediate future on both counts seems bleak, technology promises to alleviate these problems eventually. The use of optical disks to preserve materials and to prepare them for microwave transmission could provide significant relief if it ever becomes affordable. Broad applications of this technology will not come soon; but fortunately, the Library of Congress is conducting experiments with it, once again providing national leadership for libraries. With the aid of grant funds, a selected few university libraries are also experimenting with optical disks to communicate information within the local library system. It seems reasonably clear that these and other such efforts will identify the necessary techniques for using this amazing instrument. A far more problematical aspect of its future is the possible restrictions placed on its use that holders of the copyrights of material preserved and transmitted may attempt. Over a year ago, the Library of Congress, with great foresight, established an Advisory Committee of librarians and publishers to study these problems. That committee has issued a set of guidelines recently, but the publication and use of material in electronic form poses many questions regarding copyright that have yet to be addressed.

The local library system became involved in efforts that fall roughly into these two categories during the year. The prospect of a campus cable leading to microwave communications with Duke University and North Carolina State University has very significant implications for the campus' libraries, especially in connection with the shared union catalog being developed for the three universities. Fortunately, the Library has representation on the committee that will assign space on the coaxial system and will figure in future connections made by cable on campus. A small program for preservation initiated microfilming of selected titles that will expand as time passes and resources permit. While the events described below greatly overshadow these efforts today, it is clear that eventually both will be major library programs and both may well rely on optical disk technology in time.

THE MOVE

On the weekend of February 3-6, the staff departments closed down operations and moved from the Louis Round Wilson Library to the Walter Royal Davis Library. This event marked the end of a fifty-two year occupancy of the Wilson Library as the campus' main library and of ten year's planning for the new Davis Library. The transition was smooth, both for the collections and for the staff departments. The mover, experienced in relocating research collections, provided excellent service; and the staff executed a plan refined over several years. The result was that the Library was able to offer virtually uninterrupted service, and the public experienced minimal inconvenience. After the staff had transported some materials which required special handling, the general collection's relocation began on January 12. By February 2, Davis Library held 90% of the books, and all collections were there by February 21.

The relative ease of the move attests to the staff's careful preparation and conscientious implementation. Its coincidence with AT&T's divestiture produced the one major delay, the installation of the OCLC cataloging terminals. Once again, the staff's creative efforts — and OCLC's significant assistance — overcame the problem until AT&T corrected the situation. The entire staff contributed to the pervasive effort that the move required, often working extra hours, but special appreciation is due to Alfred Sharlip, Larry Alford, Bill Walker, and Brad Lamb. Scott James and Allen Ashcroft, two undergraduate students, slept at the Davis Library's front door in order to be the first to enter when the new library opened on the morning of February 7. Appropriately, they checked out George Orwell's 1984, the first book to circulate from Davis Library.

The new building has received much praise since it opened. It also has received significantly more use than Wilson Library ever did. Visitors and patrons increased roughly 100%, and by July 1, 600,000 people had been counted leaving the building. Among them were many undergraduates, who found the new building's accommodations for study attractive, with a predictable impact on the House Undergraduate Library's statistics. A Task Force of staff members, chaired by Associate University Librarian Karen Seibert, provided printed brochures, publicity in several forms, and frequent tours for students and faculty, to introduce the community to the new Library.

In May, after the necessary preparations to the 1977 stack addition were complete, the Special Collections of the Library moved there to occupy temporary quarters while Wilson Library is being renovated. This move was as smooth as the move to Davis Library, again largely through the staff's dedication, ingenuity, and planning. All the Special Collections — the Rare Book Collection, the Manuscripts Collection, the North Carolina Collection, and the Map Collection — have adjusted to a facility clearly intended for other purposes and are functioning well in their new quarters. When renovation is completed, these units will re-occupy the original Wilson Library. The stack addition will then become a depository storing lesser-used materials in the collections on campus. We are awaiting eagerly the opening of a refurbished Wilson Library, a majestic building with a distinguished past which some Davis Library staff members left with regret and no little nostalgia.

SERVICES

As indicated, the general collections' re-location directly affected patterns of use. The expected increase in service is dramatically evident, for example, in the Humanities Reference Department's 99% more reference questions in February, 1984, than in February, 1983. For the entire year, the increase was 28%, and the Business Administration/Social Sciences Reference Department had a 23% increase. But greater reliance on library service was equally apparent in the Library system's other facilities. For example, the Brauer Library's circulation exceeded last year's record circulation by 29%. The map collection in the Geology Library increased cir-ulation by 28% and the Couch Library by 21%. Two startling multi-year indicators of increased use come from the Special Collections: the Rare Book Collection had 285 reference questions during all of 1973-74 and 629 in February, 1984 alone; and the University Archives has had a growth of 267% in reference questions and of 445% in in-house use, in the five years of its existence. An addendum to this report gives statistics on reference service and circulation for the library system.

Responding to this obvious need for service, many units in the system have continued to revise and to expand guides to their specific services. This year the Planning Library created a guide for the first time, the Couch Library revised its horticultural bibliography and created one on poisonous plants and mushrooms, and the Chemistry Library revised its guide to the library. The Humanities Reference Department revised its index and abstract list and its bibliography on American history, and the Business Administration/Social Sciences Reference Department produced seven revised and seven new bibliographies on specific subject areas. Donna Cornick and Carson Holloway of that Department created a slide/tape presentation to introduce patrons to online searching. After two years' investigation and compiling, Luke Swindler, Bibliographer in the Social Sciences, produced Resources for Women's Studies, an exhaustive, annotated list of sources in this expanding area of research held by the Library.

The Library's introduction of microcomputers laid the foundation for improving other services. The Library purchased IBM PCs for the staff's use and assigned them so that the Collection Development and the Acquisitions Departments share one, the Serials and Cataloging Departments another, and the Special Collections a third. The Business Administration/Social Sciences Reference Department has one, and the Humanities Reference Department has one, the generous gift of Ms. Louise Hall, former Head of the Department. Each unit is putting this new capability to uses specific to its own work, but generally they are using it to store files, lists, and other sources. The result should be more efficient handling of information supporting public services and greater responsiveness to the public's needs. The training necessary to use the PCs effectively requires time and patience, but the staff, largely self-taught, have already found them to be highly beneficial. Clearly, it will be necessary to expand this limited beginning, as resources permit. To that end, the University Librarian appointed a Committee on Technological Priorities to evaluate requests from the staff for hardware and software, at the end of the year.

The Davis Library became the home of seven microcomputers which do not support the Library's operations directly. Before the Library opened,

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA LIBRARY

William Graves, Associate Dean for General Education, requested space for a cluster of microcomputers for training faculty to design elements of courses requiring students to use computers. This broad purpose seemed to indicate a central location like the Library. The program now occupies a reading room on the second floor, and the presence of the project's staff proved to be helpful to the Library's staff occasionally as the latter learn to use their own machines. In the course of the year, Dean Graves created a similar center in the Undergraduate Library which initially will support the project in Davis but should eventually become available to students desiring to learn the use of these machines.

Innovative service typified the departmental libraries as well. The Chemistry Department purchased a terminal, printer, and modem, for the Kenan Library's access to CAS ONLINE, a database in Columbus, Ohio, that provides graphic displays and interactive searching of two dimensional structural diagrams of chemical compounds as well as basic text searching from this and other commercial and governmental vendors. The library staff began immediately to instruct members of the Department in searching this new source. The library continues to offer the Chemistry faculty a title page service based on each individual recipient's research interests. The Zoology Library introduced online searching, and in the Couch Library, the study of the use of journals finished its third year and now constitutes a basis for deciding the re-location of materials as the library reaches full capacity. And after thoroughly examining the Music Library's space and staffing, a special committee, appointed by the Chairman of the Department and composed of faculty and librarians, made recommendations concerning that library's future development.

COLLECTIONS

Unquestionably the cardinal addition to the collections was the Hanes Foundation's gift of 300 titles produced by the Estienne family, the distinguished printers-publishers-scholars of Paris, active in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. This group of imprints, gathered over a quarter of a century by bookdealer Fred Schreiber, formed a logical complement to the Hanes Family's original gift of incunabula, donated in 1929. The wide range of subject matter which the Estiennes published significantly expands the Library's resources for research. As the largest single collection of Estienne publications in the United States, it was an extraordinary symbol of the Library's addition of its three millionth volume. The announcement of the Hane's gift on University Day, October 12, marked that occasion, further celebrated that afternoon with the fourth Hanes lecture, "The Hanes

Collection of Estienne Publications: From Book Collecting to Scholarly Resource,” by Mr. Schreiber.

The Library purchased the file copies of the John Murray publishing house, a highly prominent English publisher in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The collection contains the file copies which the Murray family retained as a record of its publishing history and consequently is virtually in mint condition. John Murray absorbed the firm of Smith/Elder, so that the collection includes many of that firm’s publications as well. The subject matter covered is almost as broad as that of the Estienne Collection, so that this addition, too, enriches the Library’s collections widely. As the year ended, the Library staff was discussing the collection’s disposition and the creation of a list that would record its original composition.

Developing the general collections was inordinately difficult this year. Impoundments in 1982/83 and in 1983/84 had interrupted the natural flow of orders and processing, and a backlog of orders had accumulated before the year began. Moreover, the orders submitted to overcome these interruptions increased this year, producing a 37% growth in orders searched. Only very close cooperation between the Acquisitions Department and the Collection Development Department avoided a chaotic situation. It was necessary to establish an intricate set of priorities, which were constantly changing to meet altered circumstances and unexpected opportunities. In the end, the results compared favorably with past years, largely because of the diligence of these two staffs. And despite the many distractions this year — especially the move — the Catalog Department produced more cataloging records than any other Southeastern Library Network (SOLINET) member.

The Library has long held two collections as uncatalogued resources, and projects this year began to prepare them for full descriptive cataloging. The Collection Development Department’s Latin American and Iberian Resources Section, awarded a grant by the National Endowment for the Humanities, began cataloging 21,067 Spanish libretti and plays that the faculty and the Library had begun to collect some 50 years ago. Since the program’s inception on September 1, 1983, some 6,000 pieces have already been prepared for cataloging. The inclusion of the collection, among the richest sources on the comedia suelta, in the Library’s catalog will be a service to scholars locally and nationally. The Rare Book Collection began sorting a collection of World War I and World War II posters given some years earlier by the Bowman Gray family. Members of the Gray family have provided funds to initiate the project, which eventually will catalog the collection.

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA LIBRARY

The bibliographic staff analyzes the collections continuously, and this year that effort, engaging the microcomputer's versatility, went still deeper. It has become routine to conduct random samplings of shelf list measurements, to analyze interlibrary borrowing, and to seek other indicators of the collections' strengths and weaknesses. This year had the benefit of a study by Barbara Allen, a student in Operations Research, who did a research paper on their sampling methods. Recently, the bibliographers have been studying the Research Library Group's conspectus, now adopted by the Association of Research Libraries to inventory collections nationally. But their own work predates the conspectus and varies from it somewhat, and at present they are examining these differences and approaches to resolving them. It is now clear that this sort of analysis which the Department began in 1975 will soon become a necessity to all research libraries.

The evaluation of collections is particularly important to the three ARL libraries in the Research Triangle, because of their many cooperative programs. Those programs, of course, require qualitative as well as quantitative analysis, and the former consumes much more time than the latter. Agreements on cooperative collection development with broad assignments of responsibility have existed with Duke and North Carolina State for decades, but now more narrow assignments are under consideration. This year attention centered on German belles lettres, French regional history, and East European materials. These efforts produced an agreement in March with Duke University, assigning coverage of northern France to Duke and of southern France to the Library. The two libraries are continuing to discuss covering contemporary German literature cooperatively, and these exchanges should generate definite agreements eventually in that area as well. In the meantime, the agreements established several years ago with the University of Virginia and with Duke to govern developing Slavic collections cooperatively continue to be fruitful.

Lists of notable gifts and purchases appear at the end of this report, but several deserve special mention. The North Carolina Collection was able to purchase forty galley sheets of Thomas Wolfe's Of Time and the River, with the author's holograph changes. The Manuscript Department received two major gifts, formerly long-term loans: the Johnston and Wood family papers, tracing the history of the Hayes Plantation back to the eighteenth century; and the papers of Charles Edward Eaton, award-winning poet and alumnus of the University. The Art Library has begun a major effort to collect American and European exhibition catalogues; and the Music Library purchased 95 librettos of eighteenth- and nineteenth-century Italian operas, manuscripts of Hasse's Oratorio and a Paisello opera, as well as a collection of nineteenth-century American political songsters.

STAFF

The staff continued to be prominent in professional organizations. Richard Shrader, Reference Archivist in the Manuscript Department, was elected the first President of the Society of North Carolina Archivists, an organization which the Department's staff was instrumental in forming. Joe Hewitt, Associate University Librarian for Technical Services, continued to serve on the Board of Directors of the American Library Association's (ALA) Resources and Technical Services Division (RTSD) and on the OCLC User's Council; and Karen Seibert, Associate University Librarian for Public Services, served her first year on the ALA Council. Marcia Tuttle, Head of the Serials Department, was elected President of RTSD, and Rodger Harris, Head of the Catalog Department, continues to chair ALA's College and University Statistics Committee of the Library Administration and Management Division. Janet Flowers, Head of the Acquisitions Department, served as President of the Library School's Alumni Association; Donna Cornick, Social Sciences Reference Librarian in the Business Administration/Social Sciences Reference Department, served as President of the North Carolina Online Users' Group; and Timothy Dempsey, Business Reference Librarian in the same Department, was elected President of the Microcomputer Users' Group in Libraries in North Carolina. The Governor appointed H. G. Jones, Curator of the North Carolina Collection, to a second six-year term on the North Carolina Historical Commission; and Alice Cotten, Assistant Curator, was elected Secretary of the North Carolina Chapter of the Special Libraries Association. In addition to this broad participation in professional leadership, staff members published two books and twenty-two articles during the year. A selected list of staff publications is appended to this report.

Staff members hosted three major conferences. In October, the Association of Research Libraries met in Chapel Hill, in the first Fall meeting ever held outside Washington. Attending directors were able to tour an unfurnished Davis Library both before and after their meeting on "The Sum of the Parts: Sharing +" rector, Academic Information Services, F. W. Faxon Company; Amanda Harmon, Head, Acquisitions, University of North Carolina, Charlotte; Mary Beth Vanderpoorten, EBSCONET Representative, EBSCO Subscription Services; Robert Broadus, School of Library Science, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill; Rexford Bross, Assistant Head, Serials Department, Duke University Library; Nancy Melin, Editor, Serials Review; Beth Shapiro, Associate University Librarian for Public Services, Michigan State University; and Linda Bartley, Head of CONSER Project, the Library of Congress. Joseph Price, Chief, Science and Technology Division, Library of Congress, gave an evening talk on LC's optical disk project. One hundred sixty librarians attended the conference, including representatives of seven other states. Chapel Hill was also the site of the Seminar on the Acquisitions of Latin American Library Materials' (SALALM) 29th annual meeting. Drs. William Ilgen and Rafael Coutin of the Latin American and Iberian Resources Section worked for months to make the necessary preparations, assisted by Jesus and Celia Leyte-Vidal and Deborah Jakubs of the Duke University Library. The highly successful conference, which drew some 250 attendants from many states and nine foreign countries, spent four days in early June discussing "Cooperation at the Local and National Level."

The staff suffered several major losses through retirements and resignations. In December, Nancy Boone, head of Catalog Maintenance since 1970, retired after 31 years on the staff. In June, Helena Gierasimowicz, Planning Librarian, retired after 13 years in that position. Ellen Anderson, Librarian of the Library School Library, resigned to take another position, and Margaret Lospinuso, Music Library, resigned to pursue a further degree. Timothy Dempsey, Business Reference Librarian, resigned to take a position in the Research Triangle. Susan Wood, Supervisor of Retrospective Conversion in the Health Sciences Library, succeeded Ms. Boone in June. At the end of the year, search committees were actively reviewing candidates to replace Ms. Anderson and Ms. Gierasimowicz, and the Business Administration/Social Science Reference Department was seeking necessarily involved Technical Services staff, and all departments had to provide coverage while staff members worked on the project. Those participating directly in the study surveyed the University community, wrote detailed reports, and formulated recommendations for action, by the deadlines established. The results, which will take final form in the Study Team's report to the Library Administration, produced many ingenious suggestions to improve service and an agenda to guide the Library for several years to come.

TRIANGLE RESEARCH LIBRARY NETWORK

The Triangle Research Library Network (TRLN) made great strides during the year. After extended study and discussion, a Committee on Organization drafted a Memorandum of Understanding describing the future governance of the Network. The Directors of the seven participating libraries adopted a slightly modified version of that draft, which the Chancellors of the three universities approved and signed. The document established a Board of Directors, consisting of the seven library directors and a university administrator appointed by each Chancellor. This structure will take effect in the coming year, and a budget, funded by the three institutions, is supporting current operations and staff.

The prototype online catalog (BIS-1) was ready for testing by the libraries' staffs, discussions with OCLC concerning a computer-to-computer link were underway, and reference manuals and help screens for BIS-1 were complete, when the year ended. The Circulation Committee completed documents specifying the top-level functional requirements of an automated circulation system, and the Coordinating Committee established an Acquisitions and Serials Study Group to propose top-level functional specifications for a TRLN acquisitions and serials control component. With funding under the Title II-C program of the Department of Education, work should begin next year on linking the three libraries. Meanwhile, a grant from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation permitted the distribution of a new COM catalog of member libraries' machine-readable bibliographic records.

FRIENDS OF THE LIBRARY

The Friends of the Library enjoyed another year of solid achievement, largely due to the vigorous leadership of Professor Douglas Eyre, President, and Ms. Frances Weaver, Executive Secretary. A group composed of the Executive Committee and interested supporters spent much of the year preparing a fund drive to culminate in a presentation at the Davis Library's dedication, scheduled for April, 1985. Dr. and Mrs. Dewey Dorsett of Charlotte have agreed to head the drive, and they are due much appreciation for the time and effort already invested in the preparation. President Eyre negotiated a gift of $12,500 from the University's Athletic Department, and the Friends are greatly indebted to that Department and to the Director of Athletics, John Swofford. The speaker at the annual dinner was Professor Doris Betts, who spoke on the "Southern Writer and the Bible," an address of unusual insight and humor. The Friends offered two programs during the year: in November, Professor Jay Bolter spoke on "The Computer and the Tree of Knowledge: Some Thoughts on the Making of an Electronic Encyclopedia" and in February, Professor Louis Rubin spoke on "On Starting a Publishing House, or Why Fools Rush In. . ."

THE ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD OF THE LIBRARY

Under the chairmanship of Professor Stirling Haig of the Romance Languages Department, the Administrative Board continued to provide invaluable guidance to the Library Administration on matters of policy during the year. Discussions of the Library's role in the electronic dissemination of information, policies governing the assignment of Faculty studies and graduate student carrels, and general problems arising from the occupancy of a new building, were the major general concerns that the Board addressed. The Board functions largely through its committees, evaluating the proposed materials budget, monitoring the acquisitions of serials, purchasing manuscripts, adjudicating the placement and duplication of interdisciplinary science materials, and funding special requests for research materials. The Committee on New Technologies continued to study the Library's role in collecting machine-readable information. The problem remains unresolved, perhaps because a viable solution requires institutional coordination; but the Board will continue to examine this complex issue.

It is little short of miraculous that the Library staff accomplished so many normal tasks so well, in view of the extraordinary burdens placed upon them this year. Any one of these burdens — two moves to new facilities, the OMS Public Services Study, the adjustments to erratic funding for collection development, or the introduction of microcomputers — would have been sufficient reason for a less productive year. Instead, as the statistical tables which follow reveal, the staff maintained its high level of service. That achievement is a direct result of their talent and dedication. The University is indeed fortunate to have a Library staff of such high quality.

Respectfully submitted,

James F. Govan
